Criteria

Look for:	Don't look for:
Originality / Innovation	Usefulness
Technical skill	Business potential, viability, sustainability
Design / User experience	Team skillset and hacker credentials (i.e.
General impressiveness	"we're Thiel fellows and ex-Googlers")

Each criterion is given a score from 1-5, 1 being the lowest, 5 being the highest. You will receive score cards.

Process overview

First Round: Expo Style

Expo judges will be given a sample of randomly selected table numbers, each corresponding to one student project.

Judges will visit the tables assigned to them, where the teams will present their projects.

Judges will fill out rubrics provided to them for each project, giving each project a rating from 1 to 5 (1 being the worst/lowest, 5 being the best/highest) for each criterion.

After visiting all the projects assigned to them, judges will return to a designated area (TBD) where they can give their scores to volunteers and take a break. Judges can then request an additional sampling of projects to visit.

This will continue until the time allocated for expo judging concludes, at which point the top 5 teams will be determined based on the ratings and will present in the final round (described below).

For sponsors prizes: During this time, sponsors with sponsor prizes will be given lists of teams that are eligible for their prizes (including room/table numbers). During expo judging, sponsors should send their designated individual(s) to go visit the various projects and evaluate them for their sponsor prizes.

Second round — next page!

Process overview

Second Round: Top 5 Presentations

Top 5 teams present for 4 minutes each followed by a 2 minute Q&A from the finalist judges.

During this time, sponsor prize judges should make final decisions by the end of presentations.

Immediately following the presentations, sponsor prizes will be awarded.

During this time, judges decide on top 3 in a different space, facilitated by one of the organizers.

The same criteria apply for both expo and finalist judging.

Final prize presentations and closing words will follow the sponsor prizes.
